

Professor Leslie Robertson & Professor Terre Satterfield

(University of British Columbia, Vancouver)

Participatory Research: Critical Dialogues/Stories from the Field

February 1st and 2nd, 2016

Faculty, graduate students, and community members are invited for one or both events.

Monday, February 1st, Event: Collaborative/Participatory Research: Past Lessons, Current Projects

Professor Leslie Robertson and Professor Terre Satterfield describe their current collaborative projects with First Nations people of Western Canada highlighting how their past experience and evolving thinking has transformed their approach to participatory research. Their stories from the field will be useful to faculty and graduate students who are 1) looking for new methods in participatory research, 2) working to integrate their academic training and skills with community-based engaged scholarship, and 3) appreciative of hearing how other researchers have handled challenging problems in collaborative research. Community members are welcome.

Location of Past Lessons, Current Projects:

Pleasants Family Room, Wilson Library

When: Monday, February 1, 2016, 12:30- 2:00 p.m.

Refreshments: Light lunch will be served.

Register for the Event: Registering will aid our lunch count (sign up now): Go to <http://tinyurl.com/z7k30tg>

Tuesday, February 2nd, Event: The Turn to Participatory/Collaborative Research: Significance for the Disciplines

Professors Leslie Robertson and Professor Terre Satterfield, drawing on their field of cultural anthropology, present and lead a discussion of the significance of the growing turn to participatory research for the disciplines and professions. The talk will give faculty and graduate students from Anthropology and across campus the chance to explore the significance for their discipline of the growing, cross-disciplinary engagement with methodologies that seek to “co-produce knowledge” with communities, “democratize research” and “decolonize of methodologies.”

Location of Significance of the Turn to Participatory Research: Alumni Building (Anthropology), Room 207

When: Tuesday, February 2, 2016, 3:30- 5:15 p.m.

Refreshments: Light refreshments

Register for the Event: Space is limited (register now): Go to <http://tinyurl.com/hu7uqep>

---

Event Sponsor(s): The Department of Anthropology, Carolina Center for Public Service, and the Graduate Certificate in Participatory Research

Contact (for more information): Dorothy Holland (dholland@unc.edu), Anthropology Department, Director of the Graduate Program in Participatory Research